The NEW YORKER
November 30, 2021

With COVID-19 cases spiking throughout the country, large swatches of the medical community, including the Centres for Disease Control and Prevention, have advised against travelling for Thanksgiving. Dinners might be smaller, or strangely Zoomified—though the amount of food, one hopes, will remain the same. In his latest cover, Barry Blitt portrays a feast in the forests of New England, where the holiday originated.
